Sipping on adventure on the new North Tahoe Ale Trail

September 24, 2015 by Julie Kailus

It's not called the North Tahoe Drunken Trail for no reason. That's according to Andy Chapman, president and CEO of the Incline Village Crystal Bay Visitors Bureau, who has helped establish the area's new North Tahoe Ale Trail.

The point is not to drive around to a bunch of tap houses and get hammered, but to explore North Lake Tahoe, California, by foot, bike or boat with a frosty-beverage destination as a reward for a day well spent — outside. More treat, less tour.
